2. Buffer system

It is often pointed out that with conventional chronograph watches, sudden application of pressure on the zero-setting button causes disorder in the chronograph mechanism within. However, the zero-setting button of Citizen Chronograph is equipped with an effective buffer system. When a sudden pressure is applied on the zero-setting button, this buffer system functions to absorb the shock that is being transmitted to the chronograph runner and minute-recording wheel.

3. Chronograph mechanism that can be operated in a number of different ways.

- a) By repeating the starting and stopping operations, it is possible to add the individual elapsed time to get the accumulative elapsed time.
- b) By pressing the zero-setting button while second hand and minute-recorder hand (and hour-recorder hand) are in motion, the hands are returned to zero position. The hands start again as soon as the finger is removed from the button. This feature comes in useful when it is necessary to reset the hands to zero and start the timer in a matter of seconds as when participants of an athletic event begin the race again after a bad start.
